A company owned by two or more partners that is not incorporated with the Secretary of State. Usually, such a business is governed by a partnership agreement naming the partner establishing their relationships to one another. In this business the partners equally share all liability of the business regardless of the percentage of ownership.

This type of business is usually governed by articles of incorporation, which require the company to be controlled by the plurality of shareholders. This means that the entity can and does assume liability as an individual.
